PRACTICE

1. Write the verb “to be” in present, past and future.

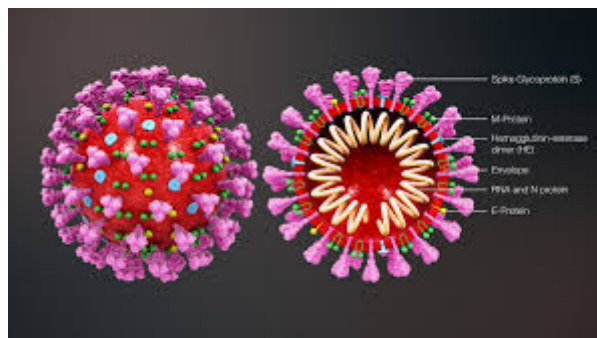

1. I... very intelligent, because I study the themes in class
2. You ... our teacher next year.
3. He ... a sailor last month.
4. She ... a nurse at the hospital . She works at a lab
5. My mother ...very intelligent

2. Copy these words.

The smoke signals rising from Downing Street suggest that the Budget due on March 11th will be dull. The covid-19 has clouded the outlook; the new chancellor, Rishi Sunak, needs to get his feet under the desk; there will be more fiscal announcements later in the year. It sounds as though the government plans to treat the budget as a holding operation. That would be a mistake. A new government's first Budget is a big moment, and this government has a lot to do. It is time to be bold, not boring.

For over a decade economic policy has been about managing a series of blows. First there was the financial crisis, which landed the government with the cost of rescuing the Banks.

Then there was Brexit, which has delayed firms' investment decisions. Now here is covid-19 which is bound to slow the economy further.
